

GOING BACK TO WORK

To Keep Myself & Others Healthy

People are starting to go back to work. Everyone will go back to their jobs at different times. Right now, it's time for me to go back to my job.

When I go back to work, there will be some new things that I will have to do. It is important to make sure everyone stays healthy and safe at work, so they don't get sick from the coronavirus.

Some jobs want their workers to take their temperature each day. My boss will tell me if I need to take my temperature every morning. This will help make sure everyone is healthy when they come to work.

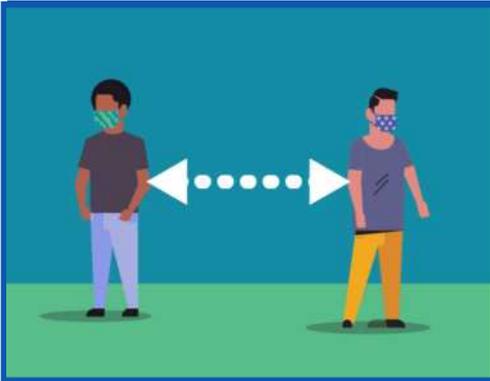

Some jobs will ask people to wear a mask. When I wear a mask, it needs to cover my nose and mouth. I can pull it down when I want a drink. I can take it off when I eat.

There may be some other special areas where I don't have to wear a mask, such as if I'm by myself in a room. I can ask my boss where I need to wear my mask.

It is important not to get too close to someone else. Leaving a lot of space, such as 6 feet, between people is called social distancing. I can wave to people, but I should not give high fives or shake hands.

There may be new rules at my job about where I should stand, where I should do my work, or places that I can sit at during my break and lunch. I should not sit close to a person, but I can still talk to my friends at work.

I might see new signs around my job with reminders to help keep everyone safe. If I don't understand something or have questions, it is good to ask people for help. My boss will be proud of me for being safe at work and following the new rules.

 AUTISM SOCIETY
Improving the Lives of All Affected by Autism

Created in collaboration with Dr. Cathy Pratt, Director of the Indiana Resource Center for Autism and member of Autism Society's Panel of Professionals; Amy Moore Gaffney, M.A., CCC-SLP, of Indiana Resource Center for Autism; and Kathleen A. Quill, Ed.D., BCBA-D of Autism Institute.